

Can you lead a force to water?

Just like people need quality water, water needs quality people. And that's where we come in. At Water Industry Training, our focus is furthering New Zealand's water industry through people – providing the training, leadership and support necessary for individuals – and as a result the industry – to thrive.

INDUSTRY ADVISER

Lower North Island

In a nutshell, this role's a great move career-wise. Because when you help people develop careers in the water industry, you'll be enhancing your own career in the process. And that's rewarding no matter which way you look at it. You'll be the vital link between the industry and its future talent – encouraging people into training by promoting courses/qualifications, and the career prospects they can expect looking forward. You can also look forward to shaping the future of industry training, as you'll work closely with industry groups and training providers to ensure training is both useful and relevant in line with ongoing needs.

As there's no actual teaching/training involved, a background in education is in no way essential. However, what we are keen to see in your CV is exposure to the water industry backed by strong relationship-building skills and a charismatic persona. A confident communicator at all levels; you'll also impress us with your attention to detail, flexibility, and great self-management skills.

In return you can expect a competitive salary, and a range of other impressive benefits.
